Update on the Amos vs Lampo lawsuit

Plaintiff, by and through the undersigned counsel and pursuant to Initial Case Management Order (Doc. # 26) and the Court's Order entered on September 19, 2022 (Doc. #45), report to the Court that Plaintiff submitted an offer of settlement. However, Defendant chose not to make a counter-offer pursuant to the court's order. Defendant instead threatened to sue Plaintiff personally if he did not dismiss the case.<sup>1</sup>

Love it.

Dave has never done anything wrong, ever. At least that's his mentality. He'll bully the shit out of people. When they fight back, dude just doesn't know how to deal with it.

A smart attorney says "make this go away. Quietly." Dave's team responds by saying "fuck that blasphemous shit. Let's respond by saying "dismiss, or we'll sue you!" How about you include your counterclaims in your

How about you include your counterclaims in your answer so it's handled in the same action and not "threaten" anything. Truth is they have no counterclaim, otherwise his attorneys would have done just that.

Former Lampo Folk

This case has been interesting to follow. It is not salacious like OConnor.

To read his complaint, he was lured under false promises of income. If I am remembering correctly, he left a job paying something like a quarter of a million to take a job at Ramsey for less than 100k, but with the promise of rapid advancement. I don't think he was seeking employment there, a recruiter found him.

Reading the pages and pages and pages of "Factual Allegations", the narrative of his time there, so much of it resonates with a lot of what us ex-employees experienced.

It paints Luke LeFevre in a negative light, no surprise given some discussions on this sub recently about his departure.

It also paints a few others in a negative light as well, Lara Johnson in particular. She was the long-time phone screener turned head of video production, or something like that. She is in the fiercely loyal inner radio circle, so that could be one reason this wasn't dropped.
